I
A LONDON ROSE
AND OTHER RHYMES

A LONDON ROSE

DIANA, take this London rose,
Of crimson grace for your pale hand,
Who love all loveliness that grows :
A London rose—ah, no one knows,
A penny bought it in the Strand !

But not alone for heart's delight ;
The crimson has a deeper stain
For your kind eyes that, late by night,
Grew sad at London's motley sight
Beneath the gaslit driving rain.

And now again I fear you start
To find that sorry comedy
Re-written on a rose's heart :
'Tis yours alone to read apart,
Who have such eyes to weep and see.

Soon rose and rhyme must die forgot,
But this, Diana—ah, who knows !
May die, yet live on in your thought
Of London's fate, and his, who bought
For love of you a London rose.

LONDON FEAST

O WHERE do you go, and what's your will,
My sunburnt herdsmen of the hill,

That leave your herds no pastoral priest,
And take the road where, sad and dun,
The smoke-cloud drapes the April sun?—

*' We go to taste
Of London Feast.'*

O country-lads, this April tide,
Why do you leave the country-side?

The new-come Spring stirs bird and beast;
The winter storm is over now,
And melted the December snow:—

*' We go to taste
Of London Feast.'*

O village maidens, April girls,
With dancing eyes and country curls,
Is April nought, the Maypole ceased,
That you must leave the daisied places
That painted all your pretty faces?—

*' We go to taste
Of London Feast.'*

And ancient dalesmen of the north,
That leave your dales, and the sweet brown earth,
Are country acres so decreased,
And Cumbrian fells no longer ringing
With bleating lambs, and blackbirds singing?—

*' We go to taste
Of London Feast.'*

O sailor lads, that love the sea,
Are you, too, of this company?—
The shifting wind's no longer east;
Yet you have put the helm about,
To come ashore, and join the rout?—

*' We go to taste
Of London Feast.'*

Too late, my golden mariners !
 I have seen there these many years,
 How Most grew more, and less grew Least ;
 And now you go too late ; the board
 Cannot one crumb to you afford :

*You cannot taste
 Of London Feast.*

Too late, dear children of the sun ;
 For London Feast is past and gone !
 I sat it out, and now released
 Make westward from its weary gate.
 Fools and unwise, you are too late :

*You cannot taste
 Of London Feast.*

They did not heed, they would not stay ;
 I saw the dust on London way
 By denser thousands still increased :
 My cry was vain. As they went by Their murmur ran, for all reply :—

*' We go to taste
 Of London Feast.'*

A WINTER-NIGHT'S BACCHANTE

THE little tumult of the hour is past,
The quick beseeching of the music, still,
That made the moments reel,
While night gave way, and faster and more fast
Pressed 'tirelessly her circling feet upon romance's heel.

The spell was hers,—hers fiddle, piping flute,
Whose rapturous magic sped the giddy throng,
While swift she glanced along,
A pale Bacchante, passionate of foot,
Whose swaying limbs and laughing eyes turned all our hearts to song.

She charmed the night till care was stolen away,
And left us happy, for an hour of heaven,
Our sins of earth forgiven,
As still we watched white arms, white garments, sway,
And radiantly she swept along, by winds of music driven.

Now dawn is wintry in the sleeping street,
And day comes back to cast its gloom on men,—
Ah me! I think, and then,
I see white garments sway, and circling feet,
That charm the wintry gloom away, and bring delight again.

But she is gone ; and only now in dreams
May fancy follow, over land and sea,
To where her haunt may be,
Where in the lyric south her footing seems
As of the fawn that wakes the day in fabled Italy.

ON A HARP

PLAYING IN A LONDON FOG

WHAT Ariel, far astray, with silver wing,
Upborne with airy music, silver-sweet,
Haunts here the London street?—
And from the fog, with harping string on string,
Laughs in the ear, and spurs the lagging feet, While Caliban-like, London sulks, though all the stars should sing.

Such mystic harping once its silvery scale
Ran in grey Harlech, and on Merlin's Hill,
Where listening fancy still
Can hear it, like some song in fairy-tale ;
And still in Broceliaunde the oak-trees will Repeat its lingering sighing strain to many a cold sea-vale.

Here harps the mystic noise should make the dead

Of London wake, and all its walls have ears ;

As when in Troy the spears

Rang in the streets, by Helen's beauty sped :

Here harps the song of Merlin, or the spheres :

But London sleeps, unmoved, and dreams his other dreams instead.

So may he sleep,—the waking hour unknown,

When Ariel's song shall end what it began,

And waken Caliban.

And yet, who knows, his sleep is lighter grown

By half-a-song's weight, since that chiming ran, Athwart the fog, like thistledown o'er misty uplands blown.

Were strength like theirs that hold the night
With solemn watch, though London sleep,
To arm my soul with steadfast might,
Then fear might end and hope be sure.
Could I like them my vigil keep,
Like them endure.

But they were built 'twixt hope and fear
By men who took the passing day,
And gave its moments heavenly wear ;
Though they who built are darkly gone
Their art remains, and in it they Are greatly known.

So art is frail, but art is strong ;
And he is wise who keeps the way
His soul shall lead, and sings his song,
Or bids dead stone take life and climb,—
So yields his service for a day,
Or for all time.

CHATTERTON IN HOLBORN

FROM country fields I came, that hid
The harvest mice at play,
And followed care, whose summons bid
To London's troubled way.

And there, in wandering far and wide,
I chanced ere day was done
Where Holborn poured its civic tide
Beneath the autumn sun.

So hot the sun, so great the throng,
I gladly stayed my feet
To hear a linnet's captive song
Accuse the noisy street.

There heavily an old house bowed
Its gabled head, and made
Obeisance to the modern crowd
That swept athwart its shade.

Below, an open window kept
Old books in rare display,
Where critics drowsed and poets slept
Till Grub Street's judgment-day.

One book brought care again to me,—
The book of Rowley's rhyme,
That Chatterton, in seigneury
Of song, bore out of time.

The merchant of such ware, unseen,
Watched spider-like the street ;
He came forth, grey, and spider-thin,
And talked with grave conceit.

Old books, old times,—he drew them nigh
At Chatterton's pale spell :
'Twas Brook Street,' said he, 'saw him die,
Old Holborn knew him well.'

The words brought back in sudden sway
That new-old tale of doom ;
It seemed the boy but yesterday
Died in his lonely room.

Without, the press of men was heard ;
I heard, as one who dreamed,
The hurrying throng, the singing bird,
And yesterday it seemed.

And as I turned to go, the tale
A pensive requiem made,
As though within the churchyard rail
The boy was newly laid :

REQUIEM

‘ Perhaps, who knows ? the hurrying throng
Gave hopeless thoughts to him ;
I fancy how he wandered, long,
Until the light grew dim.

‘ The windows saw him come and pass
And come and go again,
And still the throng swept by—alas !
The barren face of men.

‘ And when the day was gone, the way
Led down the lethal deeps :
Sweet Life ! what requiem to say ?—
’Tis well, ’tis well, he sleeps !’

ORANGE SONG

TO BRIAN AND MARGARET, WITH SOME SICILIAN ORANGES

CHILDREN, these gold orbs were won
From the circling of the sun,
Where its golden light is free
On the shores of Sicily.
Northward, then the ship set sail,
Brought them here to tell the tale,—
Brought them by the bold sea-way,
Round to London's wintry day.

Now, their sweetness of the south,
Quartered, kiss each merry mouth !
And their fragrances be spent
On the air in sweeter scent.
But ere yet you all unseal them
Of their sweets, and lightly peal them
Of their yellow jackets,—stay !
Ere you taste, in golden play
Spin them, children, in the sight
Of the friendly red firelight ;

And their golden wayward dancing,
Over wall and ceiling glancing,
Shall like fairy suns illumine
All the deep December gloom.

They shall still go shining on
Then, and still your eyes be feasted ;
They shall be in fancy tasted
Then, when all their gold is gone.

IN A LONDON CHAMBER

STRANGE things pass nightly in this little room,
All dreary as it looks by light of day ;
Enchantment reigns here when at evening play
Red firelit glimpses through the pallid gloom :
Then come—perchance the shadows there assume
The guise—heroic guests in dim array,
The kings of eld, returned the human way
By Bridge of Dread, from star to straitening tomb.

High dreams they bring that never were dreamt in sleep :
These walls yawn wide to Time and Death and Hell,
To the last abyss of men's wild cries to Heaven ;
While night uncurtains on a sobbing deep,
And lo ! the land wherein the Holy Grail,
In far Monsalvat to the soul is given.

BARA HAIDD

(BARLEY BREAD)

WELSH RHYMES AND BALLADS

BARLEY BREAD

A COTTAGE on earth, and a castle in air,
And Diana Mereryd's white apron shall wear,
And bake barley bread to a tender old song
Of Love in a cottage, that always was young :
And when winter comes, and the storm holds the hill,
And Davyth can find no more grist for the mill,
Ah, hers are the kisses shall frighten away
The cares of his heart at the close of the day ;
When at nightfall they sit in the glow of the fire,
And he draws closer still as the shadows draw nigher ;
And the night-wind without, as it wintrily calls
From the hill to the glen, cries in window and walls,
Like the world's cold reply to the poet's desire.

THE MOUNTAIN COTTAGE

FAR below the gold and green
High on Moel Morvyth seen,
Where more rarely thrusts the heather
Through the gorse its purple feather ;
Far below, yet far aloft
From the wayward wizard Dee ;
Secret in its garden croft,
Fenced with rural mystery
By the homely mountain-sides :
There a lonely cottage hides.

There, the summer through, our cares
In the freer mountain airs
Change their guise, as may the thorn
When the wild white rose is born :
There, the early morning light,
Leading day across the height,
O'er the climbing larch-tree tops
And the birchwood's silvery copse,
Brings such greeting to our glen
And our windows, half-asleep,
That the lurking day again
Seems with sudden life to leap,

Hailed with rapturous carollings,
Lifted on a thousand wings,—
As it were the promised morn
Of the perfect day of earth,
That between his death and birth
Once for every man is born.

Now the rising sun may show
Through the treetops, all aglow,
And the lowing calf is mute,
And the blackbird drops his flute :
But the day, as you shall see,
Has a changing harmony :
Once within our threshold, all
Has its hour of festival ;
Every rafter in our rhyme
Tells of its old forest-time ;
And our lattice-windows hold
In their panes the mystic gold
Of the gorse, and many a gleam
Of the sunset's airy stream.

All too soon, the setting sun
Radiantly withdraws his light,
Solemnly, from Morvyth's height,
And the summer's day is done.

But we see the night descend
From the mountains, like a friend ;
And, if chill the twilight falls,
High we pile the fragrant hearth,
And the peace of all the earth
Settles on our lonely walls.
So we keep our evening feast
With all rural savours spread,—
Charge the cup, and break the bread,
Counting most what may seem least :
Then, if storm be all abroad,
Witching every lonely road,
And the wind cry in the tree,
And with impish hands the rain
Shake and snatch the window pane ;
Then we tell old country tales,
While without the night wind wails,
And the more, at what we hear,
Grows and glows our fireside cheer.

Many a long-gone poet, then,
In our feasting lives again :
Herrick, and old Henryson,
Milton, Marvell, Campion,
Or, the king of heart and mind,
Master of the mimic kind ;
Many more, whose names are gold,

~~Need not~~ that our love be told :
Heine's note and Shelley's song
Lead us round to Burns ere long,
Or with Keats we turn and hark
His April eve of old St. Mark,
Or Wordsworth, with austerer rhyme,
Mountainous, sets thought to climb.
But of all whose hearts have sung
One there is, of older tongue,
Tunes his woodland note apart
Still more near to touch the heart :
Davyth of the leafy line
Pours for us his lyric wine,
Till our pulses thrill with song,
And all wondrous fancies throng
With an elfin melody
And a strain of old romance
Every glade and green expanse
Of the poet's forestry.

Too remote the mountain life
From the modern noise and strife,
It may seem. Yet, well it knows
Other lives and deeper throes,
Where in London's splendid dust
Men and women strive, and thrust
Weary hands to find the gold

Sunk beneath it, and grow pale,
Seeking still, that still must fail ;
While sweet youth grows keen and old,
And three times the die is cast,
Shows the master-chance is past.
Oft at night, if silence fall
In our midst, we seem to hear
London's pulse beat fast and near,
And the fierce continual call
Of its multitude that waits
A deliverer at the gates. •

But another tale is ours :
All the summer history
Of the changing mountain flowers,
Of oaken bough and birchen tree ;
From the hour that sees unclose
First the shy white maiden rose,
To the empurpled August weather
When the wild-bee seeks the heather.
If our fancy, bee-like, roam,
Tired at last its wings fly home ;
As of old Glendower turned
To this vale whose name is his,
To his pastoral house of peace,
From the fields where battle burned.
Now is sheathed that ancient sword,

But its song remains, and still
Sounds from lonely field and hill,
Clear as when Glendower warred ;
Still it hangs mysteriously
On our walls, where they may see
Who have subtle art to read
All the rose in one grey seed,
All the passion of romance
In the maiden's timid glance,
All the Druids, dimly shown,
In the fallen mountain stone ;
And within our mountain gate,
All the ancient Kymric state.

Heart and harbour of our days !
If afar our feet may roam,
Glad at last we hasten home,
Following the famous ways
Where your bards and heroes passed,
Glad at heart to come at last
Here, and find a breathing space
In your mountain resting-place.

MOUNTAIN TWILIGHT

SUNSET fades, and in the sky
Twilight shows that night is nigh ;
But its pale and paler glow
Lingers long on yonder stream,
Where the silent waters seem
Loth to leave the vale below.
Now the trees turn old and grey
In the wan white evening light,
While the shadows drape the day
With the purple robe of night.
Moel Morvyth's sombre height
Fills Glendower's vale with awe ;
Mountain-side, and lonely farm
Which an hour ago you saw
Nestling in the mountain's arm,
Empty road, and stream and field,
In this dusk enchantment yield
Mysteries it was not given
Even to Merlin's eye to read,
Till from earthly habit freed
On the mountain heights of heaven.

THE MOUNTAIN WEDDING

THE purple and the gold are gone
From Moel-y-Gamelŷn,
That made our summer crown and throne ;
And now from its cold slopes, alone
I watch the year close in.

The year goes fast ; now Autumn calls
On Winter from the hill ;
While round and round our lonely walls
The dead leaf flies and whirls and falls,
At wild October's will.

But these late voices of the year,
The dead leaf on the pane,
As love's new rhyme of love, I hear ;
They bring the bridal morning, dear,
When we 'll be wed again !

THE WEDDING OF PALE BRONWEN

I

THE wind was waked by the morning light,
And it cried in the grey birch-tree,
And the cry was plain in Bronwen's bower,
'O Bronwen, come to me!'

Pale, pale sleeps Bronwen, pale she wakes—
'What bird to my bower is flown?
For my lover, Red Ithel, is at the wars
Before Jerusalem town.'

But still the wind cried in the tree,
'Come forth, 'tis your wedding morn,
And you must be wed in Holy Land
Ere your little babe is born.'

And still the wind had her true-love's cry,
'Kind Bronwen, come!' until
She could not rest, and rose to look
To the sea beyond Morva Hill.

And afar came the cry over Morva Hill,
‘ Kind Bronwen, come to me ! ’
Till she could not stay, for very love,
And stole away to the sea.

She crossed the hill to the fishing-boats,
And away she sailed so fine,—
‘ Is it far, my love, in the summer sun
To the shores of fair Palestine ? ’

II

There was no sun at sea that day
To watch pale Bronwen drown ;
But the sun was hot on the deadly sands
Before Jerusalem town.

All day Red Ithel lay dying there,
But he thought of the far-off sea ;
And he cried all day till his lips grew white,
‘ Kind Bronwen, come to me ! ’

And so it passed till the evening time,
And then the sea-wind came,
And he thought he lay on Morva Hill
And heard her call his name.

He heard her voice, he held her hand :
‘ This is the day,’ she said,
‘ And this is the hour that Holy Church
Has given, for us to wed.’

There was no strength in him to speak,
But his eyes had yet their say,—
‘ Kind Bronwen, now we will be wed
For ever and ever and aye !’

III

Beneath the sea pale Bronwen lies,
Red Ithel beneath the sand ;
But they are one in Holy Church,
One in love’s Holy Land.

Red Ithel lies by Jerusalem town,
And she in the deep sea lies ;
But I trow their little babe was born
In the gardens of Paradise.

THE HOUSE OF HENDRA

'S'ai Plas Hendre
Yn Nghaer Fyrddin :
Canu Brechfa,
Tithau Lywelyn.'

'Ef a welai hen-llys adfelliedig, a neuadd drydoll.'

NOTE

Hendra; Hendre; or Hendref: 'An old or established habitation, the same as a ganafdy or winter house, being opposed to the hafotty, or the temporary residence in the mountains, to attend the flocks during the winter months. It forms the name of many old mansions: as Hendref Gadog, Hendref Urien' (Dr. Owen Pugbe). Pronounce Haindra. The Brechva of this poem must not be confused with the other Carmarthenshire hard of the same name.

THE HOUSE OF HENDRA

I

The House of Hendra stood in Merlin's Town, and was sung by Brechva on his Harp of gold, at the October Feasting of Ivor.

In the town where wondrous Merlin
Lived, and still
In deep sleep, they say, lies dreaming
Near it, under Merlin's Hill.

In that town of pastoral Towy,
Once of old
Stood the ancient House of Hendra,
Sung on Brechva's harp of gold.

With his harp to Ivor's feasting
Brechva came,
There he sang and made this ballad,
While the last torch spent its flame.

Long they told,—the men of Ivor,
 Of the strain
 At the heart of Brechva's harping,
 Heard that night, and not again.

11

Incipit Brechva's Ballad of the House of Hendra, and of his deep sleep there on Hallowmas night, and of his strange awaking.

In yon town, he sang,—there Hendra
 Waits my feet,
 In renownéd Merlin's town where
 Clare's white castle keeps the street.

There, within that house of heroes,
 I drew breath ;
 And 'tis there my feet must bear me,
 For the darker grace of death.

There that last year's night I journeyed,— Hallowmas !
 When the dead of earth, unburied,
 In the darkness rise and pass.

Then in Hendra (all his harp cried
 At the stroke),
 Twelve moons gone, there came upon me
 Sleep like death. At length I woke :

I awoke to utter darkness,
Still and deep,
With the walls around me fallen
Of the sombre halls of sleep :

With my hall of dreams downfallen,
Dark I lay,
Like one houseless, though about me
Hendra stood, more fast than they :

But what broke my sleep asunder,—
Light or sound ?
There was shown no sign, where only
Night, and shadow's heart, were found.

III

Anon he hears a voice in the night, and rising from sleep, looks out upon the sleeping town.

So it passed, till with a troubled
Lonely noise,
Like a cry of men benighted,
Midnight made itself a voice.

Then I rose, and from the stairloop,
Looking down,
Nothing saw, where far before me
Lay, one darkness, all the town.

In that grave day seemed for ever
 To lie dead,
 Nevermore at wake of morning
 To lift up its pleasant head :

All its friendly foolish clamour,
 Its delight,
 Fast asleep, or dead, beneath me,
 In that black descent of night :

But anon, like fitful harping,
 Hark, a noise !
 As in dream, suppose your dreamer's
 Men of shadow found a voice.

IV

Hearing his name called, Brechva descends to the postern, and sees thence a circle of Shadows, in a solemn dance of Death.

Night-wind never sang more strangely
 Song more strange ;
 All confused, yet with a music
 In confusion's interchange.

Now it cried, like harried night-birds,
 Flying near,
 Now, more nigh, with multiplying
 Voice on voice, ' O Brechva, hear ! '

I was filled with fearful pleasure
At the call,
And I turned, and by the stairway
Gained the postern in the wall :

Deep as Annwn lay the darkness
At my feet ;—
Like a yawning grave before me,
When I opened, lay the street.

Dark as death, and deep as Annwn,—
But these eyes
Yet more deeply, strangely, seeing,
From that grave saw life arise.

And therewith a mist of shadows
In a ring,
Like the sea-mist on the sea-wind,
Waxing, waning, vanishing.

Circling as the wheel of spirits
Whirled and spun,
Spun and whirled, to forewarn Merlin
In the woods of Caledon.

V

The Spirits are no dream-folk ; but ancient inmates of the House of Hendra.

Shades of men, ay, bards and warriors !—

Wrought of air,

You may deem, but 'twas no dream-folk,

Born of night, that crossed me there.

And my heart cried out,—‘ O Vorwyn !

They are those

Who of old-time lived to know here

Life's great sweetness in this house.’

I had bid them kinsman's welcome,

In a word,

For the ancient sake of Hendra,

Which they served with harp and sword.

But as still I watched them, wondering,

Curiously,

Knowing all they should forewarn me,—

Of my death and destiny !

Ere I marked all in the silence,

Ere I knew,

Swift as they had come, as strangely

Now their shadowy life withdrew.

VI The Spirits being gone, Brechva hears aerial music, and sees in vision all the Bards in the seventh Heaven.

They were gone ; but what sweet wonder
 Filled the air !—
With a thousand harping noises,—
Harping, chiming, crying there.

At that harping and that chiming,
 Straightway strong
Grew my heart, and in the darkness
Found great solace at that song.

Through the gate of night, its vision,
 Three times fine,
Saw the seventh heaven of heroes,
'Mid a thousand torches' shine :

All the bards and all the heroes
 Of old time
There with Arthur and with Merlin
Weave again the bardic rhyme.

There a seat is set and ready,
 And the name
There inscribed, and set on high there,—
BRECHVA of the Bards of Fame !

VII

Here ends the song with the immortal consolation of Death, and Brechva prays for peace.

Know then, O ye men of Ivor,
How elate
To his death at last goes Brechva,
When he fares from out your gate!

Three nights hence, and all his journeying
Gladly done,
Then the friendly door of Hendra
Opens to her destined son.

Once more shall it open for him,
And no more ;
When they bear him out for burial,
With the singing boys before.

Then the gate of night those circling
Spirits crossed
Shall be opened wide, and show him
Heaven and all the bardic host ;

All the bards, and golden Merlin
In the throng,
Gathered there, and harping Brechva
To his peace with solemn song.

And all peace be yours and Brechva's
Now, and fate
In the ancient House of Hendra
Yield him soon death's high estate !

BRECHVA'S HARP SONG

'And there shall yet arise a King in Wales !'

ANCIENT PREDICTION.

LITTLE harp, at thy cry,
He shall come in good time ;
And thy sword-song on high,
High shall chime.

Little harp, in his brain
Is the fire ; in his hand
Are the sword and the rein
Of command.

Little harp, like the wind
Is his strength ; like thy song
Are his words, to unbind
Wales ere long !

Little harp, if his name
Be unknown, ye shall hear
How the stars tell his fame
Far and near.

Little harp, if unknown
He come, ye shall sing
When Eryri shall throne
Him All King !

OLWEN

(FROM 'KILHWCH AND OLWEN')

THE message was sent, and the maiden came,
And the maiden was clad in a robe of flame,
And about her neck was a collar enrolled
Of emerald and ruby and ruddy gold.
More yellow her hair than the flower of the broom,
And her skin more white than the white sea-foam ;
And fairer her hands and her fingers fine
Than the wood-anemones that twine
In the spray of the meadow fountain's dance.
The falcon's eye, the gerhawk's glance,
Not brighter than Olwen's eyes of light ;
Her bosom was more snowy white
Than the swan's white breast, and not more red
Than Olwen's lips the roses spread :
Four white trefoils lightly leapt,
Where'er on the forest floor she stepp'd.
The forest flowers tell her fame ;
And Olwen therefore is her name.
Whoever Olwen once may see,
For ever must her lover be.

‘Y FAM A’I BABAN’

(FROM THE WELSH)

THE mother yields her little babe to sleep
 Upon her tender breast,
And singing still a lullaby,
 Hushes its heart to rest :
‘O sleep in peace upon my bosom,
And sweetly may your small dreams blossom :
And from the fears that made me weep you,
And from all pains, as soft you sleep you,
The angels lightly guard and keep you,
 And hold you blest !

‘Your mother dear, is often full of fear,
 As the moments run ;
Her love entwines so close, ah dear,
 Dearest little one.
Her song is in its music weeping,
To think of death and its dark keeping,
That yet might turn those red cheeks white,—
Life’s rose, that grows so in her sight ;
And your bright eyes, like morning light !—
 Dearest little one !’

THE BIRCH GROVE

(FROM DAVYTH AP GWILYM)

AH, the pleasant grove of birches,
A pleasant place to tarry all the day ;
Swift green path to holiness ;
Place of leaves on branches deftly strung,— Tapestry meet for proudest princess ;
Place of the thrush's voice, the king of song,
Place of the fair breasted hill, green place of treetops,
Place set apart for two, far from jealous strife ;
Veil that hides the maiden at the wooing,
Full of delight is then the green birch grove.

Lo, I possess the whole extent of the birches,
Each corner of the greenwood is my throne ;
I have loved as my Saviour this building of Nature, Tapestried in tenfold royalty by the leaves of the grove.
The sweet-voiced nightingale beneath the green boughs,
Is the herald inhabitant of the wood,
Endlessly pouring his song from within the forest,

From the jutting hill and the glistening green treetop ;
And so I pour forth songs in praise of my green
enclosure,
My purest green parlour framed of leaves.

There is a chamber for us within the grove
Made all of young vines ;
A gleaning of the birch boughs, fair in colour,
Makes in this chamber a fragrant bed.
A place for the gentle gift of love
Is the house of leaves made by God the Father.

Fair chapel, sacred from strife,
Of boughs and leaves in the green and airy May ;
Be ye, O trees, my fitting consolation,
In that I am left houseless to-day.
O nightingale, with the grey wings trailing low,
That art from the beginning the love messenger in May,
Be a strong voice from the steep hillside ;
Let the day bring the meeting between Morvyth and me !

A RHYME OF DIANA

THE NEW DIANA

DIANA, in that older time,
Was only a cold goddess,
Who never hid a lover's rhyme
Within her heaving bodice.

But now, so long as love can write,
Diana shall be human,
And to Olympian grace unite
The sorrows of a woman.

A DREAM OF DIANA

IN dream I saw Diana pass, Diana as of old,
Across the greenwood radiantly, attired in green and gold :
With spear alert, with eyes afire, as they had seen the sun,
And gave its glances back again, with brightness
of their own ;
No human maid is she, I thought, who there so lightly fares
Upon her sylvan empery, afar from our pale cares.

She passed, and left me to that thought, who felt the sadder then,
That only once, and not again, she might be seen
of men ;
Though constantly, by lawn and wood, and hanging mountain-side,
My restless eye might dare to hunt the huntress in her pride :

Without her all was lonely grown : I had no liking left,
For ferny glade, or fox-glove bloom, of her bright grace bereft.

And in that taking, in a bed of softest fern I lay,
And found no joy of woodcraft left, the livelong summer day ;
When lo ! at eve, a silvery horn, a questing hound,
a cry,
And swift, Diana came again, and sat her down thereby :
And then I saw those radiant eyes were full of perfect rest,
And found beneath the goddess there, the woman's softer breast.

Be wise, O fools, and shun her cruel eyes,
Which, when you see, you straight must love, to death.

This new Diana has such sorceries,
Who loves her, dies ;
And dying, cries still, with his latest breath,—
Ah, dear Diana !

THE MYSTICAL MOUNTAINEER

THE morning sun shone out, and showed the way,
 Showed glen and greenwood, hill and lonely height;
 Said he, 'The mountains call me forth to-day':
 Said she, 'Then go; but come again to-night!'

He hailed the sun, he hailed each field and stream,
 And every hill up-poised, and every tree,
 His wanderer's pulse made all the morning seem
 Some sweetest love-song's natural melody.

In glen and greenwood, hill and lonely height,
 He heard that song; whereat, as 'twere a spell
 To charm the day, he saw a wondrous sight,—
 Diana everywhere: he knew her well:

He knew her well, though no one else might see
 Her by the river, and upon the height:
 And as he saw, and heard that melody,
 The morning rang with the refrain, 'To-night!'

THE IDLE RHYMER

HERE alone in Aber grove
 Still I match my rhymes with love,
 While the good September sun
 Turns the green of earth to gold,
 And the river's never done
 Telling secrets never told.
 Here I lie, who should be bent
 At my cloistral table still,
 O'er the tardy instrument
 Of my brain's laborious will ;
 Here I lie and turn to rhyme
 Anything that first may rise
 In my fancy's airy clime,—
 Thoughts of dear Diana's eyes
 When they light with wit's surprise,
 (Wit, 'tis said, too quick for me,)
 And their merry sudden smile,—
 And the deeper mystery
 Of their tears, (Here pause awhile,
 While I sorrow for each tear !)

And the beauty rare and fair
Of her form, and all the grace
Pictured in Diana's face
'Neath the halo of her hair :

Ah, ye trees of Aber glen,
If I roam apart from men,
And am idle in your grove ;
Know it is because I love,
And my rhymes absolve me then !

INVOCATIONS

I

COME over, Diana, across the grey sea ;
From the green hills and valleys, come over !
And bring, as you love me, the shy little key
That can open your heart to your lover !

 Come over,
 Diana, come over the sea !

II

Fair wind, blow fair, to bring Diana over !
Fair sun, shine out across the Irish sea !
And all you fragrant airs the earth sets free,
And all you lovely things, as I'm her lover,
Put on your best to bring her back to me.

NIGHT SONG

I HAVE waited long in the night for you,
And the hour is late,
And the songs are hushed, and the watchers few,
At the palace-gate.

The torches have lit the revellers forth,
And shown them home ;
And the stars have changed in the sombre north :
But you do not come.

The night wind stirs with a lonely sound :
You do not know
What loneliness in my heart is found,
As I turn to go.

PILGRIMAGE

STORM down, October, on the earth,
As with December's rage !
Come hail or snow, I journey forth
On lover's pilgrimage.

By field and stream, this bolder path
I follow for her sake,
Whose thought can of the winter's wrath
A song of summer make.

Among these wintry fells and fields,
For her dear sake I roam,
Until some greener valley yields
Her sweetest heart a home.

EPITHALAMION

THE pains of earth are over,
 The joys of heaven begin ;
 To-night 'tis told your lover,—
 ' O wanderer, enter in !

' Her feet have passed before you,
 She opens wide the door,
 Who, for the love she bore you,
 Your pain and passion bore.

' One word to your dear lady,
 And heaven is yours for aye ;
 The feast is spread and ready,
 The harping minstrels play.

' Your sins of earth forgiven !
 Oh, she forgives each one ;—
 Now, pilgrim, enter heaven,
 Your pilgrimage is done !'

THE ROMANCE OF JULIUS ROY

ROMANCE

HERE I must write what may never be shown you
Till all is past—romance and its grace ;
When but the knowing how I could have known you Shall call up love's torchlight too late in your face.

Ah, starry-eyed ! shall this sorrowful passion
But burn on out, when love is so deep ?
Why should I try then to sing, poet-fashion ?
Far better be silent, far better asleep.

Asleep—if to dream ! No Hamlet's misgiving
Shall e'er make me fear it. Ah, only to dream
That we far away in some dream-land are living,
And your eyes are alight there, the stars that they seem !

THE MOUNT OF VISION

‘ I ’LL climb to-night,’ he said,
‘ And see the day die at the feet of night,
Till earth and heaven are back to chaos fled,
And darkness knows not light !

‘ And there, as freed by death,
The world withdrawn, I ’ll test the immortal fire,—
What heaven outlasts this passionate human breath,
What love outlasts desire.’

THE DREAMER'S TRAGEDY

IN the taking of dream, in the old way of sorrow,
Led in deep sleep, through a darker than night,
Night cries I heard, unknown as the morrow,
Crying, 'Oh see, where Saint Silvia passes !'
And I saw where she passed, like a star in the height.

This is the dream that by night comes upon me,
And leaves me to darkness more deep ; for 'twas writ,
Writ so by fate, when her starry eyes won me :
There is her way to the light, mine to darkness,
That's deeper dark now, for the fire she once lit.

MARGARET

THEY were two children, like these flowers,
In changing beauty drest ;
I loved as dearly Margaret's grace
As Silvia's deep unrest.

They were but children, and I thought,—
I thought no harm to tell
Of the hope of eternal fame of song,
That the poet knows so well.

But time went on, and they became
New dowered in woman's ways,
And I saw their eyes had a deeper light
And their forms a fairer grace,

And Silvia shone, a flower of gold,
A flower to sun the night ;
But Margaret as the Spring's first bloom,
That makes the sad heart light.

And light and glad, with boundless love
My sad heart quickly grew,
And the merry sun of spring and youth
Made all old things seem new.

And yet a little while, and then—
And then the end was come ;
And Margaret's was the way of light,
And mine was the way of gloom.

COR MORTIS

THE way is dark and hard,
Beset by death, and darker dreams and fears ;
The way is long and dark and evil-starred ;
And still no end appears.

With god-like challenge, life
May call me forth with sword and song to fight ;
But I go doubting, hopeless, to the strife,
With heart of death and night.

‘HAMLET’ IN COUNTYTOWN

THE play was over, and to dreams consigned
 That tardy, desperate dreamer’s cry of pain ;
 While through dark streets, beneath the gusty rain,

Now Silvia passed, and I was stayed behind
 To hear the yawning critics gape their blind
 Generic commonplace, and vacant strain ;
 While Silvia passed to take the midnight train,
 Smiles on her lips, old Denmark in her mind.

So much for love’s delay ! A moment more,
 And then the storm stayed Silvia in the throng,—
 A moment more and she was mine at will :
 In Countytown we talked of Elsinore,—
 The midnight train was grown a myth, a song,
 And the gusty climbing street, an enchanted hill.

THE MELANCHOLY JESTER

Now the end of all be sung :
He is old, who once was young ;
He is old, and to the gate
Of the gods is come too late :
Jester, gladly yield your breath ;
Now the only jest is Death.
Soon shall Silvia, passing, say—
' Faith, my clown is turned to clay :
Deep, with solemn obsequies,
Hide the clay that once was his,
Keep him, earth, sun, wind and rain,
Till his wit shall rise again !'

THE NIGHT RIDE

To-NIGHT we rode beneath a moon
That made the moorland pale ;
And our horses' feet kept well the tune
And our pulses did not fail.

The moon shone clear ; the hoarfrost fell,
The world slept, as it seemed ;
Sleep held the night, but we rode well,
And as we rode we dreamed.

We dreamed of ghostly horse and hound,
And flight at dead of night ;—
The more the fearful thoughts we found,
The more was our delight.

And when we heard the white owl fly,
And hoot with mournful tone,
We thought to see dead men go by,
And pressed our horses on.

The merrier then was Silvia's song
Upon the homeward road,—
Oh, whether the way be short or long
Is all in the rider's mood !

And still our pulses kept the tale,
Our gallop kept the tune,
As round and over hill and vale
We rode beneath the moon.

RED ROSES, AND WHITE

RED ROSES

Roses, if my passion burn
Red as you, with fragrant fire,
Shall it die like you, and turn
Soon to death its great desire ?

Or, shall love die every year
But to live, with deeper hue
Every June because of her ?
Roses, shall it live like you ?

WHITE ROSES

No sleep like hers, no rest,
In all the earth to-night :
Upon her whiter breast
Our roses lie so light.

She had no sins to lose,
As some might say ;
But calmly keeps her pale repose
Till God's good day.

SILVIA'S SOLITUDE

SHE has left the places
Of our common day ;
Here are still the traces
Where she took her way :

Here a primrose, lying
By a beechen tree ;
Here a footprint, spying
Out her destiny.

But no tree, nor flower
Ever in greenwood,
May lead you to the bower
Of Silvia's solitude.

SANCTA SILVIA

SHE was the lady of our hearts and minds,
Our queen of beauty, by the natural spell
Of her deep eyes, whose hue the sky may tell ;
As now it seems my fancy newly finds
Their likeness in this little brook that winds
Reflecting every sky-change through its dell :
So all things rare, of earth and sky, so well
Her memory keep, in all their fairest kinds.

But all her beauty had the sky's impress,
Her eyes were tinct with : so in memory now
An aureole of sky-born mystery plays
Above the vision of her loveliness,
That never more on earth may make us bow
With the old boyish chivalry of those days.

ON THE EVE

THE clouds are strangers in the sky to-night :
 Two only, far above, grey-lighted, fare
 In all the night's long wilderness of air,—
 Two lonely travellers in the starry height.
 Eastward, whence they are come, the sea in might Cries in the darkness from its wintry lair ;
 Now westward lies their way, to mountains where Earth's ancient bastions rise against their flight.

In all the night, in mountain, sea, and sky,
 There is no augury my heart can find,
 Save in yon clouds that coldly mark my fate,—
 Intent to-night on pilgrimage more high,
 Barred by the ancient bastions of the mind,—
 'A journey,' say they, 'do not take!' Too late.

THE PRIDE OF DEATH

IF adverse wind then meet my ship of fate,
Let me be careless that thou comest, Death !
Who still would live, but know my frail estate
To make an end full soon, and pass beneath
To thy last darkness, Death, which proudly I await.

The quondam dream that men, so passing, went
To other seas, is gone ; with this frail breath
Ends all, I know, and sail on well content,—
Pleased as I live with life, well pleased, O
Death,
To meet thy wind full soon, on thy pale errand sent.

AD MATREM
AND OTHER
OCCASIONAL VERSE

AD MATREM

THERE is no envied gift of perfect grace
And priceless fragrance, but is still too poor
To bring and lay this morning at your door
In sign of all love's quiet tale can trace,
Since first your boyish tyrants ran a race
To hail your coming, and you still forbore
To chide their careless hearts, that strove the more,
The more they read love's challenge in your face.

To riper deeds now time has called us forth,
And wider fields, and some abroad are gone ;
But though deep seas divide, and still we roam
Unto the Indian south, or Arctic north,
Once more to-day your love can make us one,
And failing other gifts our love flies home.

TO WALT WHITMAN

ON HIS SEVENTIETH BIRTHDAY

HERE health we pledge you in one draught of song,
Caught in this rhymers' cup from earth's delight,
Where English fields are green the whole year long,
The wine of might,
That the new-come Spring distils, most sweet and strong,
In the viewless air's alembic, wrought too fine for sight.

Good health! we pledge, that care may lightly
sleep,
And pain of age be gone for this one day,
As of this loving cup you take, and, drinking deep,
Grow glad at heart straightway
To feel once more the kindly heat of the sun
Creative in you, as when in youth it shone,
And pulsing brainward with the rhythmic wealth
Of all the summer whose high minstrelsy
Shall soon crown field and tree,
And call back age to youth again, and pain to perfect health.

May 1889.

TO PERCY

WITH A COPY OF WORDSWORTH

IN the hottest' crowd, when grace
Seems to hide her maiden face,
Here you 'll find a mystic voice
Full of heaven's supernal noise :
Lake and stream and woodland here
Wait you always, far, yet near ;
And a breath of mountain wind
Rustling in the leaves you 'll find :
In the world's seducing clan
It shall be your talisman,—
Keep it, Percy, long in honour
Of its author (and its donor)!

TO MABEL

WITH THE 'GOLDEN TREASURY OF
SONGS AND LYRICS'

HIDDEN here, with hearts of song,
Live the poets, always young ;
Read them, Mabel, through and through ;—
They will give their hearts to you !

TO VIOLET

IN HER SICKCHAMBER

WITH SOME MOUNTAIN FLOWERS

VIOLET, we send you here
This for mountain messenger,
News from field and hill to bring
Of a day when everything
That has seemed so grey and sad
Shall again be only glad ;
When all natural things that knew you
Shall give health again unto you,
And pain's requiem be said,
And the rose be doubly red,
And all flowers in the sun
Shake their dainty frocks for fun.

Violet, the Spring is flown
When your kindred-flowers were strown
In our mountain lanes, and soon
We shall see the harvest moon :

Filled with finer flowers and rhymes,
When no pains of earth shall bind you,
But each sun that shines shall find you
Happier and happier yet
While your name is Violet !

TO M. H. E.

IN England I know it is Spring,—
 In old England to-day,
 With primrose and violet and rare daffodil,
 In many a valley, on many a hill,
And the birds are beginning to sing,
 As I would, if I knew the way.

But I know the way of the Spring,
 When old England turns gay
 With primrose and violet and rare daffodil,
 And all that I know, you know better still,
And all that I mean, but can never sing,
 You will let my daffodils say.

AT THE RHYMERS' CLUB

I. THE TOAST

SET fools untó their folly !
Our folly is pure wit,
As 'twere the Muse turned jolly :
For poets' melancholy,—
We will not think of it.

As once Rare Ben and Herrick
Set older Fleet Street mad,
With wit, not esoteric,
And laughter that was lyric,
And roystering rhymes and glad

As they, we drink defiance
To-night to all but Rhyme,
And most of all to Science,
And all such skins of lions
That hide the ass of time.

To-night, to rhyme as they did
Were well,—ah, were it ours,
Who find the Muse degraded,
And changed, I fear, and faded,
Her laurel crown and flowers.

Ah, rhymers, for that sorrow
The more o'ertakes delight,
The more this madness borrow :—
If care be king to-morrow,
We toast Queen Rhyme to-night.

II. MARLOWE

With wine and blood and wit and deviltry,
He sped the heroic flame of English verse :
Bethink ye, rhymers, what your claim may be,
Who in smug suburbs put the Muse to nurse ?

THE NEW KING OF BRENTFORD

TO R. LE G.

IN REMINDER OF AN OLD PROMISE¹

ARE there no buds at Brentford?
We ask our budding rose,
Whose stem each day a tiny sword
Of tender green, unsheathes and shows
Against his February foes.

No cakes and ale at Brentford?—
Though Brentford's King be dead,
We know a King whose lyric word
Was given, in his jovial stead,
To pour the wine, to break the bread.

¹ 'When there are buds enough in the garden, you two must come and feast at Brentford!'

Are there no buds at Brentford,
Where, round your ancient house,
The crocus hears the blackbird.
Bid every blade of grass arouse
Within the garden close?

Dear lyric King of Brentford,
Though March on fifty stormwinds sail,
We hold you to your royal word :
By every bud that feels the gale,
We call for cakes and ale !

A DIALOGUE

CONCERNING LOVE'S DELAYS

- ‘SEVEN years Sir Song must wait for me ;
I shall not change,’—she said.
- ‘Seven years,’ he said, ‘this change may see ;
Live lords may then be dead !’
- And dead may live, but live may die,
And Love’s young blood run pale ;
And year by year, ere seven go by,
End many a true-love tale.
- ‘Ah then, too late, your heart may say
To Love—What, are you flown ?
When one of us is turned to clay,
And one is worldly grown.’

THE WANTING RHYME

I WOULD love you for ever and ever, my dear,
And that were a little time :
I would love you for ever and ever and aye
If your name would but rhyme.

But no rhyme can I find you, Mereryd,
And until love find you one,
And the lover come with the wanting rhyme,
You still must roam alone.

THE SECRET

AFTER HEINE

WE do not sigh, our eyes are tearless ;
And if we smile, we laugh no more ;
Never shall the hidden secret
From our eyes gleam as of yore.

The ancient wound, for ever aching,
Throbs on beneath its blood-red stain ;
Within the heart its pang is hidden,
Within the lips its speechless pain.

Ask of the babe within the cradle,
Ask of the dead within the grave :
'Tis only these can ever tell you,
What fate as secret to me gave.

AN AUTOBIOGRAPHY

WALES England wed ; so I was bred. 'Twas merry
London gave me breath.
I dreamt of love, and fame : I strove. But Ireland taught me love was best :
And Irish eyes, and London cries, and streams of Wales, may tell the rest.
What more than these I asked of Life, I am content to have from Death.

THE LAST WORD

The last word's uttered, and the last line writ,
Of thought's long tarrying in these quiet walls ;
And now oppressively the feeling falls
That all the past, by hope and wonder lit,
May never more renew the noble heat
And passionate hope of youth, that set the blood
So wildly brainward, as it surely would
Have throbb'd aloud, and made men know of it.

But what has been may never be again ;
Even now to-morrow dawns, another day,
Whose sun is not the sun that shone before
And painted Heaven on my window pane :
To-morrow comes, and points the different way,
That I must take, and so return no more.

THE MOUNTAIN SONG

A FABLE FOR CRITICS, BY WAY OF EPILOGUE

Now came Diana, as in ancient story,
With shining spear, and tunic gold and green,
And I, of late so sorry,
Grew glad again to see her, the forest boughs between.

‘What news?’ I cried: ‘A-hunting I have been,
To find the fawn,’ she said, ‘and took this bird,
Whose like I have not seen!’
Within her hand I saw then, where some silver feathers stirred.

Her hand she opened, and a note we heard,
And ruffling wings, and straight, away it flew;—
Yet not as if it feared,
But as if it needs must haste to the mountain haunts it knew.

And piping as it passed, its silvery hue
Gleaming afar, like sun on April grass,
We heard it still pursue
Its piping way and disappear within the mountain pass.

But much I wondered what wild kind it was,
And asked Diana, what its forest name?
She laughed—she said, ‘Because I fear its unknown note foretells your doubtful fame.

‘For few will understand, and many blame,
The simple piping of your unknown song,
And many cry you shame ;
And yet your rhyme shall turn again, and keep its mountain tongue.

‘And if it fail, it shall not be for long :
For some there are who knew the note before ;
And some who did you wrong
Shall find that piping in their ears, and lose the spell no more !’

Telegraphic Address—
'BODLEIAN, LONDON'

'A WORD must be said for the manner in which the publishers have produced the volume (i.e. "The Earth Fiend"), a sumptuous folio, printed by CONSTABLE, the etchings on Japanese paper by MR. GOULDING. The volume should add not only to MR. STRANG'S fame but to that of MESSRS. ELKIN MATHEWS AND JOHN LANE, who are rapidly gaining distinction for their beautiful editions of belles-lettres.'—Daily Chronicle, Sept. 24, 1892.

Referring to MR. LE GALLIENNE'S 'English Poems' and 'Silhouettes' by MR. ARTHUR SYMONS:—'We only refer to them now to note a fact which they illustrate, and which we have been observing of late, namely, the recovery to a certain extent of good taste in the matter of printing and binding books. These two books, which are turned out by MESSRS. ELKIN MATHEWS AND JOHN LANE, are models of artistic publishing, and yet they are simplicity itself. The books with their excellent printing and their very simplicity make a harmony which is satisfying to the artistic sense.'—Sunday Sun, Oct. 2, 1892.

'MR. LE GALLIENNE is a fortunate young gentleman. I don't know by what legerdemain he and his publishers work, but here, in an age as stony to poetry as the ages of Chatterton and Richard Savage, we find the full edition of his book sold before publication. How is it done, MESSRS. ELKIN MATHEWS AND JOHN LANE? for, without depreciating MR. LE GALLIENNE'S sweetness and charm, I doubt that the marvel would have been wrought under another publisher. These publishers, indeed, produce books so delightfully that it must give an added pleasure to the hoarding of first editions.'—KATHARINE TYNAN in The Irish Daily Independent.

'To MESSRS. ELKIN MATHEWS AND JOHN LANE almost more than to any other, we take it, are the thanks of the grateful singer especially due; for it is they who have managed, by means of limited editions and charming workmanship, to impress book-buyers with the belief that a volume may have an æsthetic and commercial value. They have made it possible to speculate in the latest discovered poet, as in a new company—with the difference that an operation in the former can be done with three half-crowns.'

THE BODLEY HEAD, VIGO STREET, LONDON, W.

‘Nearly every book put out by Messrs. Elkin Mathews & John Lane, at the Sign of the Bodley Head, is a satisfaction to the special senses of the modern bookman for bindings, shapes, types, and papers. They have surpassed themselves, and registered a real achievement in English bookmaking by the volume of “Poems, Dramatic and Lyrical,” of Lord De Tabley.’
Newcastle Daily Chronicle.

‘A ray of hopefulness is stealing again into English poetry after the twilight greys of Clough and Arnold and Tennyson. Even unbelief wears braver colours. Despite the jeremiads, which are the dirges of the elder gods, England is still a nest of singing-birds (teste the Catalogue of Elkin Mathews and John Lane).’—Mr. ZANGWILL in Pall Mall Magazine.

‘All Messrs. Mathews & Lane’s Books are so beautifully printed and so tastefully issued, that it rejoices the heart of a book-lover to handle them ; but they have shown their sound judgment not less markedly in the literary quality of their publications. The choiceness of form is not inappropriate to the matter, which is always of something more than ephemeral worth. This was a distinction on which the better publishers at one time prided themselves ; they never lent their names to trash ; but some names associated with worthy traditions have proved more than once a delusion and a snare. The record of Messrs. Elkin Mathews & John Lane is perfect in this respect, and their imprint is a guarantee of the worth of what they publish.’—Birmingham Daily Post, Nov. 6, 1893.

‘One can nearly always be certain when one sees on the title-page of any given book the name of Messrs Elkin Mathews & John Lane as being the publishers thereof that there will be something worth reading to be found between the boards.’—World.
